Hola Ronald, para realizar una instalación de redes primero de todo hay que asegurarse de haber hecho un buen diseño de la red. Esto es básico si queremos que todo funcione correctamente. Lo recomendado es hacer un diseño en bloques ya sea con el modelo jerárquico o con el modelo Enterprise Composite Network Model (ECNM)pues son los que Cisco recomienda. En este post: http://bit.ly/diseño_redes lo explican más detalladamente.
Aún así, si sigues teniendo dudas en Mercadoit http://bit.ly/tienda_it somos especialistas en ello, pregúntanos, podemos ayudarte ;)

From your handle, I take it you're in Ocean Cnty. I'm in Camden Cnty. Can you give a little more specifics as to where you're located, and some of your 'catches'?

I've been under the impression that GRE made scanners don't like high powered transmissions on some frequencies.

You can buy a 5/8 wave antenna and use a large baking sheet as a ground plane. That will give you the best chance for 2 meter reception. They are inexpensive. If you want something more directional, you can find plans for a yagi. These are inexpensive as well. Google the web. They are all over the place.

Yep, very helpful device for all my scanners. You just have to play with

I just revived my old PRO 2006 (I am going to mount it in an antique wooden case)..I dropped an RS232 mod in many years ago and would like to use a program called win-turbo to control the thing...problem is the software web site/author will not answer an email.

Anybody have a register key they would like to sell (if the agreement allows this of course)

Thanks

That would be a ok scanner, except the technology has changed, and the newer modes of digital are not covered by this scanner
A Ideal scanner would do both digital and analog...

The funny thing is - they still block cell frequencies - although the cell phones all went digital and encripted - hence you wouldn't be able to hear them anyways...

AND - you need a much better antenna and situation to listen to UHF digital then you did low band VHF analog - so although it might be high tech, that does not mean that you will still be able to hear everything you could when it was analog.

Hehe... Google pulls up all kinds of stuff, even this decade-old thread.

I also live in Garland, and when I turn my computer speakers' volume all the way up, I can hear KRLD on them - but only while my hand is still on the volume dial. As soon as I break physical contact with the speaker, it goes silent. Sometimes it picks up reception all on its' own, which really freaked me out while I'm in bed or another room... until I figured out what it is. I think it's kind of cool, but KRLD will hook you up with a signal blocker if you request it - or you could get something at Radioshack.

KRLD - operates with a effective radiated power of 50,000 watts.
Probably when it was built, there were no houses where the transmitter is located. As urban sprawl continues, and property values increases, being in prime real estate becomes an issue.

I would think that there is a problem with their ground radial system, although 50,000 watts is enough power to light a light bulb next to the tower.

You could complain to the FCC, but since they have been licensed since 1925? you are not going to get much satisfaction.. The FCC might even tell you, if you didn't want to be exposed to that much RF, you shouldn't have moved there in the first place.

Or you can use Ferrite Beads on all the lines which will take away the common mode currents that are building up on the lines.

You can buy the software here - http://www.butel.nl/products/arc5/arc5.html

Or you can download it from here - http://parnass.org/tk5/

Radio Reference supports a site which will automatically program it to your local area, from what I read. I do not belong to Radio Reference - hence I don't know anything about it.

Looks to be a real PITA to program - without a cable and software.

Traditional solution: blocking circuit in the feed line. Thatsa lotta blocking.
But if you're not AM dxing you have a bit more hope since it's likely the harmonics and the odd mixer products (heterodynes) that you'll be trying to remove.

Hard to do a highly directional antenna that covers a lot of shortwave bands (lotsa bucks) but something like that would be a start. And you can use tuned lengths of coaxial feedline to try to null out some of the signal without going to the bother of building or buying a fancy nulling device. Neither of these is likely to solve the problem outright, though.

You _could_ put a Software Defined Radio in another county and access it via the 'net. Don't know if they have scanner versions, but the devices can be quite versatile, so why not?

As far as non-radios picking up radio signals, buy higher quality equipment or have someone electronics savvy insert bypass caps and other items as described in the ARRL Handbook. If it comes in via RCA/S-Video get higher class cables and add ferrite beads (there are snap-on varieties that do not require surgery on the cable), at least at the end that's nearest your equipment's inputs. May also have to do the power cords, maybe in conjunction with a high quality surge suppressor at the wall.

Get to be friends with the transmitter engineer. Can't hurt, and if you're on good terms he may know of a few things you might try.

Simple blocking circuit: a 365 pf variable capacitor and a 240 microhenry ferrite core inductor or coil, connected in series and connected between the two conductors of the feedline, all placed in an aluminum box. Readily available RCA or "F" connectors can be used to connect to the feedline.

Sometimes I see people use two of these, say in the same box with an aluminum baffle between the two parts, loosely coupled with, perhaps, a reasonably small capacitor, in the feed line (or a third, parellel wired, tuned circuit) between them. Nice little hacker's project, and something that probably tunes to a good null, but once you're trying to put three tuned circuits in a homebuilt trap you may be better off buying a commercial product.

There are some problems that cannot be solved by high-pass filters or nulling circuits. These are harmonics, or, less likely but troublesome when present, heterodynes. Both can be caused by bad metal-to-metal contacts in the environment - gutters and downspouts, fencing, even the buried ground system below the tower. Don't have any experience tracking these things down, but there's plenty of information available on reducing RFI - radio frequency interference. Start with the Radio Amateur's Handbook and other publications of the American Radio Relay League.

Calculations:

You might consider an ERP of 50K watts versus, say, a ham radio at 100 watts. Usually a ham radio at a distance of one city block pefectly acceptable while the 50KW AM band signal is well known to cause problems.

But let's say we want to reduce down to 50 watts.
That's 1000:1 in power. It's is common to just count the number of decimal places in ratios of this sort - amplification or attenuation - so that's 10^3 - 3 decimal places. Communications engineers call one power of 10 a Bel, so it's three Bels, or, more commonly, 30 deciBels (dB).

So what you want is something that reduces the unwanted RF signal by at least 30 dB. Thats' doable. I suspect you could find a high-pass filter with a low-frequency cutoff of 2 Mhz and an attenuation of 30 dB, for a 50 or 75 ohm feedline, without much of a problem.

Rethinking...

I chose the standard tuned circuit components used in the input stage of an AM radio over the years, but looking closer I would guess that for a low impedence feed line you would get better results - a sharper null - using a smaller inductor and a larger capacitor.

So let's say we divide the inductance L of the coil by 10.

For 1080 Khz, you need 1/sqrt(L C) = 2 pi f, or C = 1/(4 pi^2 f^2 L). This means you'll need to tune C to about 900 pf for a 24 uh coil. If you use a 365 pf variable C and add 750 pf or so in parallel to it, then, changing to using this smaller coil, you should be able to tune the null plus or minus a few hundred Khz around the station frequency.

Do u still have that or has anyone found the precious manual yet?

30. PLEASE DO NOT POST BINARY TO THIS GROUP [was: Radio programming software collection]

Please do not post raw binary to Usenet.

There are well established ways to do this, and most newsposting software will automatically use them for binary files. Whether binaries should be posted here at all is a separate issue; some may object to that as well.

The hjsplit software may split binary files, but it appears to generate a collection of smaller files that are still considered binary on most operating systems, and definitely outside of the standards (RFC's) for Usenet.

To attach your files, even those output by hjsplit, use standard attachment techniques.

Clue: if there is not a "mime type" in the headers created when you attach your binary data, you haven't done it properly.
